The members and committee staff thoroughly discussed each recommendation previously agreed to by the committee, taking into consideration the data collected within the time constraints imposed on the committee (both oral presentations and research), the limits on the working group's ability to estimate costs, the expertise and diversity each member brought to the committee, and the legality and constitutionality of each recommendation. The various drafts, notes, and ideas of the committee were vetted and incorporated into a consensus document, and the final recommendations of the committee were unanimously adopted, subject to a few final edits.
